AXIS P1425-LE Network Camera

User Manual

After entering the passwords, it is then forwarded to the live view of the camera. On the hardware side, the only thing you should do is connect the camera to the network. Once you are on the camera page, you are automatically prompted to create a self-signed certificate for SSL access and a password for the Root account (default Administrator). Once the root user is established, you can add more user accounts with privileges ranging from Viewer, Operator, or Administrator. If you are using the encrypted connection, the wizard will bring you to the page where you generate an authorized SSL certificate or create an SSL request that is required to send to a CA (Authority certification). You select the security within each of the user logs in the module - Cryptrypted or Encrypted and both. It is important know that if you choose the manual option then go to the Advanced Settings tab to set the DNS address, otherwise the camera will be accessible on the network but inaccessible from outside. Note that the switch that the camera will be connected must be a POE switch, otherwise the camera would not work. AXIS provides a dynamic DNS service that would get the new DNS address and set it to a static address. The account is added with administrator privileges and uses root as the username. Operators and Viewer have similar privileges, however, can be differentiated by accessing the Ptz option. Locate the camera on the network and type the IP address. Basic Setup TCP/IP Users The TCP/IP menu allows the user to select the camera's IP settings. Basic Setup TCP / IP relative You can choose to manually assign the IP or leave the settings according to the default settings in which case the router will assign settings for the camera.
